

McCoys say farewell to 'special' Smullen

ACING is still trying to come to terms with the death of Ireland's nine-time champion jockey Pat Smullen, who passed away from pancreatic cancer this week at the age of 43.

AP McCoys said yesterday that the star line-up assembled by Pat Smullen for last year's race at the Curragh which raised more than €2.5million for cancer trials highlighted the affection in which he was held.

McCoys, who said he was 'heartbroken' by Smullen's death, willingly answered Smullen's call to join a line-up of Irish legends including Paul Carberry, Kieren Fallon, Richard Hughes, Johnnie Murtagh, Joseph O'Brien, Charlie Swan and Ruby Walsh. Smullen's death came a year to the day after a race which electrified the Curragh. McCoys said: 'It shows what a special person Pat Smullen was. I had genuinely said at Doncaster when I rode four years earlier that I was not riding in a race again. I meant it. But it wasn't an option to say no because it was for Pat Smullen. Those memories from that day will last for ever. Our paths crossed quite a lot over the last 30 years.'

'We had a very similar circle of friends. It is hard to lose such a young, talented man who gave it his all. If you had a young jockey just coming in you would state him Pat and say, "Be like him". He was class. You can't describe how sad it is.'

Irish champion jockey-turned-trainer Murtagh said: 'Everyone wanted to be like him. He was the champion jockey in Ireland in more ways than one.'

Racecourses in Britain and Ireland held a minute's silence in Smullen's honour yesterday and jockeys wore black armbands.

Respect: Pat Smullen's hearse at the Curragh
